

I think replacing FM translator service with low power FM broadcast is a bad idea, particularly where it may end broadcasts of K-LOVE radio. I have listened often to their programming. It covers a large part of the country, and so they are able to put together some very good programming, and this helps in areas that may not have a broad enough base to support quality programming like this. This is good not just for me but for many other listeners looking for such programming. When I lived in the Danville, VA area recently, it was the only station of it's kind that we could get.

Thank you for taking this into consideration!
